I have submitted considerable documentation in the past on technical aspects of the FCC rules. My degree of satisfaction with the response from the FCC is zero.

I am convinced that a similar detailed recommendation would receive the same biased response as I have perceived in the past. I will consequently this time only plead that the task of protecting the environment and public health be turned over to a Federal agency with expertise and commitment to the topics at hand.

I am rapidly losing faith in the Environmental Protection Agency as well, but believe it has a much greater chance of providing credence to the public and at least has staff with expertise. I urge this Administration and the Congress to take this action to return a semblance of confidence to a highly flawed process.
